The latest Intellectual Property Crime Threat Assessment, produced jointly between Europol and the European Union Intellectual Property Office (EUIPO), reveals that the distribution of counterfeit products has been thriving during the COVID-19 pandemic. The health crisis has presented new opportunities for illegal trade in counterfeit and pirated items, and criminals have adjusted their business models to meet the new global demand.

The report, based on EU-wide data and Europol's operational information, confirms that counterfeiting and piracy continue to pose a serious threat to the health and safety of consumers, as well as to the European economy. Imports of counterfeit and pirated goods reached EUR 119 billion in 2019, representing 5.8 % of all goods entering the EU, according to the latest data from OECD and EUIPO.

In addition to the categories of counterfeited clothes and luxury products seized, there is a growing trade in copied products which have the potential to damage human health, such as counterfeit medicines, food and beverages, cosmetics and toys. Counterfeiting also causes major losses to original brands and businesses, sometimes even leading to bankruptcy.
