Part I: Reading

Terminator 2: Judgment Day

It is one of the biggest-grossing US science-fiction films at that time, in 1992, starring Arnold Schwarzenegger as T-800 and Robert Patrick as T-1000. These two killing machines, aka terminators, have contrasting assignments: the benevolent T-800 as a protector to the little boy John Conner (Edward Furlong) and the malevolent T-1000 as his killer. Computer Skynet was behind Conner's killing mission, whereas the human resistance was behind his protection.

T-1000 is incomparably more advanced than T-800. T-1000 can reassemble itself after falling apart. It can also impersonate people and animals. T-800 can only impersonate people's and animals' sounds. Interestingly, the two machines have state-of-the-art IT. They are skilful at driving all vehicles and flying choppers and planes. They can use weapons very well, and they have immunity against gunshots, teargas and bombs.

Following computer Skynet orders, T-1000 came from the future to kill John Conner. T-1000 dressed as a policeman and found its way to where John lived, but he was not there. He had already left with his mother's credit card, hacked its PIN code and withdrew 300 dollars. Soon, an exciting chase scene broke out between T-1000 on a big truck and John Connor on a motorcycle. T-800 joined in the chase. Amazingly, T-800 managed to foil all T-1000's attempts to kill John Conner.
