Poverty-Fighting Charities in Algeria

By: Luke Sherrill

Algeria is a large country in North Africa. Although it has many natural resources, about 14.6% of its people still live in poverty. A lot of organizations are working to help poor families, especially in refugee camps and rural areas. These charities focus on food, health, education, and support for children and women.

One group called Oxfam helps Sahrawi refugees by giving food and helping them grow vegetables on small farms. They also improve water systems by fixing tanks and pipes. Another group, the World Food Programme (WFP), gives meals and snacks to schoolchildren and provides support for families to grow food in new ways, such as using fish farms or small gardens. These efforts help people eat better and live healthier lives. UNAIDS works to stop the spread of HIV in Algeria. It helps mothers protect their babies from the virus and teaches people about their health and rights. Another group, SOS Children's Village, takes care of children who have lost their families. They offer a safe place to live, along with food, medical care, and education.

These charities are making life better for many people in Algeria.
