An Algerian hero

Liamine Zeroual was an Algerian military officer and politician. He served as president of Algeria from 1994 to 1999. He was born on July 3rd, 1941, in Batna, in eastern Algeria. At the age of 16, he joined the army and took part in the Algerian War of Independence against France.

In 1965, he went to the Soviet Union of Military Training. After that, he returned to Algeria and led in artillery unit in Sidi Bel Abes. He held several important positions and different military regions. In 1989, he became commander of the land forces and helped build the People's National Army. He also served as ambassador to Romania from 1990 to 1991, and in 1993, he was appointed defense minister.

Zeroual became president during the difficult period of the Algerian civil War, known as 'the black decade'. In 1995, he organized the first presidential elections in Algeria. Throughout his career, he gained the respect of many colleagues for his honesty and sense of duty.

In the following years, he stayed away from public life and refused to take part in presidential elections again. He said that he preferred younger generations to lead the country. Many people respected his decisions and he sends of responsibility. Zeroual passed away on March 28th 2026 , in Algiers at the age of 84.
