A. Comprehension. (07 pts)

Read the text then do the activities that follow.

All the children in the United States have to receive an education, but the law does not say they have to be educated at school. A number of parents prefer not to send their children to school. Children who are educated at home are known as "home-schoolers". There are about 300,000 home-schooled children in the United States today.

David and his wife teach their three children at home. David says that his children learn differently from children in school. Learning starts with children's interests and questions. For example when there is a heavy snowfall on a winter day, it may start a discussion or reading about climate, snow removal-equipment, Alaska polar bears, and winter tourism. On a spring day evening the family is out watching the stars, it is then a good opportunity to ask questions about space program. If the Brazilian rain forests are on TV news, it could be a perfect time to talk about how rain forests influence the climate, how deserts are formed, and how the polar ice caps affect ocean levels.

Home-schooling is often more interesting than regular schools, but critics say that home-schoolers might find it difficult to mix with other people in adult life. Critics also say that most parents are not well qualified to teach their children. Furthermore, most parents don't have time or the desire to teach their children at home, so schools will continue to be where most children get their formal education.

International Anti-Corruption Day

Corruption is an issue that affects all countries around the world. It can refer to the destruction of one's honesty or loyalty through undermining moral integrity or to the use of power or trust for dishonest gain. In most cases, corruption comes in various forms such as bribery, law-breaking and covering mistakes or silencing whistleblowers.

The spread of such malpractices may be with heavy consequences. It can undermine democracy, create unstable governments and set countries back economically. That's why, the UNO General Assembly designated December 9 as International Anti-Corruption Day. This decision aims to raise people's awareness of corruption and of the role that the United Nations Organization plays in fighting and preventing it.

The celebration of Anti-Corruption Day often includes the delivery of keynote speeches about corruption, the dissemination of posters, flyers and other material, in addition to recognition ceremonies to pay tribute to people and projects that provide assistance to nations and communities in the battle against corruption.

Although the battle against corruption can't be won through celebrations, this international occasion remains, above all, a remarkable opportunity to engage the general public to effectively fight corruption and fraud in communities.
