Part I: Reading

Read the text carefully, then do the following activities:

Child labour is the exploitation of children through any form of work that can be harmful to their health or that is likely to interfere with their physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development or with their right to education. All work done by children under age of 15 and any dangerous work done by children under the age of 18 is illegal. In fact, child labour is prohibited under many international conventions and agreements. According to estimates by the International Labour Organisation (2017), there are 152 million children, aged between 5 and 17, subject to child labour and nearly half of them -79 million- are in hazardous jobs. Globally, some 70.9% of the children engaged in child labour are working in agriculture, 17.2% in the service sector and 11.9% in heavy industry.

Poverty is often cited as the main cause of child labour. It is widely believed that families will not be able to cope if their children do not work. In practice, however, the poverty argument does not hold water. Precisely the opposite is true: child labour maintains poverty. Experience shows that deep-rooted social norms, violation of workers' rights, discrimination against certain groups, and a poorly-functioning education system are the primary reasons why children aren't attending school. Moreover, because children are easy to exploit and are cheap labourers, they are hired in preference to adults. Child labour thus leads to lower wages and higher unemployment among adults. Children who work and do not go to school will end up in low paid job later, and so will their children- and so the vicious cycle of poverty is perpetuated.

Child labour exist because children's rights are not respected, governments do not provide compulsory free and accessible education, there is no decent work for adults specially for parents, consumers worldwide demand low-price products, business owners can benefit from children's cheap labour. But most of all nothing has been done to stop it.

Child labour is a global problem that requires a global solution. In Asia, Africa and Latin America, governments, businesses and the civil society have to shoulder their responsibility, and work together towards eradicating child labour so as to get children out of work and into school.
