Text: Qal'at Beni Hammad: "The First Zelige Artwork in Africa"

Qal'at Bani Hammad (Arabic ,قلعة بني حماد):also known as Qal'a Bani Hammad or Qal'at of the Beni Hammad, stands as a silent witness to centuries of history, culture, and artistic innovation. In the 11th century, it served as the first capital of the Hammadid dynasty.

Situated in the Hodna Mountains northeast of M'Sila, Algeria, UNESCO recognized its significance and inaugurated it as a World Heritage Site in 1980 under the name Al Qal'a of Beni Hammad. Within its 7-kilometer long walls.

It is also characterized by four complexes echo the lives of its inhabitants, a monumental structure, similar to the Grand Mosque of Kairouan, charms the city. Its 20-meter minaret pierces the sky, excavations revealed terracotta, jewels, coins, and ceramics, a demonstration to the high civilization developed by the Hammadids, lion's motifs decorate these fountains, adding artistic touch.

The first slippery or "Zelige" artwork in Africa is found there, within these ancient walls, artisans perfected the technique, creating ceramics with a smooth, glossy surface. This innovation marked a pivotal moment in Algerian artistry.

Qal'at Bani Hammad, a silent echo of creativity, resilience, and the interaction of civilizations.

El Mechouar Palace: A Glimpse into History

Centrally situated within Tlemcen, El Mechouar once served as the official residence of the Zayyanid rulers. Originally part of the greater Mechouar Citadel, this palace stands as the sole major element preserved from that era. In 2011, it played a prominent role during the selection of Tlemcen as the Capital of Islamic Culture.

Yaghmurasen Ibn Zyan, the founder of the Zayyanid dynasty, initiated the construction of El Mechouar. The reasons for abandoning the old palace near Tlemcen's Great Mosque remain mysterious. It might have been due to concerns about exposing the harem to prying eyes or the desire to assert royal dignity with a new residence. The site of El Mechouar was previously occupied by a kasbah established by the Almoravid leader Yusuf ibn Tashfin and later used by the Almohads.

The palatial complex comprised multiple structures, including residences, pavilions, gardens, a mosque, and a hammam (bathhouse). The main residences took the form of courtyard buildings, each centered around a fountain or water basin. During the Zayyanid period, four primary palaces existed: Dar al-Malik (the royal residence), Dar Abu Fahr (associated with joy and delight), Dar al-Surur (the house of happiness), and Dar al-Raha (the abode of comfort.(

Ingeniously, the Zayyanids adapted their palaces for different seasons: the summer residence featured mudbrick construction, keeping the interiors cool, while the winter residence was built of stone, providing warmth during colder months.

El Mechouar Palace stands as a silent witness to the grandeur, creativity, and resilience of a bygone era—a place where history, culture, and architectural finesse converged.
