Mock Exam

Part One: Reading

Read the text then do the following tasks.

If students at Harvard, the most prestigious school in the world are caught cheating, it's safe to assume that cheating happens more often than we think. About 75 percent of students admit to cheating. In a culture more accepting of cheating, it has sadly become an expected phenomenon at schools. It's hard to say what makes it common and acceptable but clearly whatever is being done to stop cheating today hasn't worked.

Students' reasons for cheating are different. Ambiguous attitudes may cause academic dishonesty. Competitive pressures placed on them at a very young age favours success over integrity. Lack of respect for the institution also prevents them from reporting instances of dishonesty. Others lack understanding of what constitutes cheating, so they cheat on accident or in a way that isn't known to be called so. Self interest encompasses all cheating as students hope to see a return on their time and resources in school.

As the internet makes cheating easier than ever, how can it be stopped? Tightening the rules during exams, taking measures, removing the desire to cheat are the most assured ways of encouraging academic integrity. So instead of laughing at a friend's story about cheating, confront them about it. Cheating poses a threat, but it can be reduced by us when we choose to stop it from happening. (www.educationalissues.com)
